This is one of those pathetic, heart rending stories of an outcast child that is not wanted at birth, and denied all the pleasures of a nice home and loving parents.

Little Blackie Dog is thrown out into, a bleak, black and dismal world. But then after all what does that matter when there is a good kind Providence that watches over all and creates some vitally important task for this, insignificant, outcast, homeless waif, to do.

The same dizzy old farmer that threw little Blackie Dog out in the snow, without even a box of matches, also had a great prize flock of black ducks that he thought right considerable of. Well anyway as those things go sometimes, a pesky hungry wolf decides to steal a few of these nice fresh ducks for his Christmas dinner. But, wait a minute - do, you think he gets away with it--No Sir!! Not on your life. Little Blackie steps right on the gas and grabs right ahold of the wolf talk. The darn villian turns around and leads with an upper cut that flattens our Blackie for a minute. But he comes back strong. Of course he gets it again and lands on the oblique angle of his left ear.

But unlike other similiar incidents in real life in this case, honesty, sincerety, etc. triumphs and our Blackie picks up a hammer and flattens the villianous wolf, returning the prize duck to the farmer, and then he is taken back into the flock.

This seems to prove that:-"One good turn deserves another"
